UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES
The UNIVERSITY of OKLAHOMA

Dean's Welcome

Friends and Colleagues,

Modern libraries are engaged, active spaces where lives are changed through discovery and learning.

With the University of Oklahoma's renewed aspirations to lead among academic research universities, the University Libraries' central role in student success and academic research has never been more important.

As the state's largest comprehensive research library, we are a vital educational and cultural resource with impact that extends beyond OU's campus boundaries. We support research and educational goals and objectives across every discipline in every college, every school, and every department. Our librarians and other information professionals foster and sustain scholars through a diverse array of relevant services, programs, events, and experiences. Outside of the university, every profession and industry can be connected to the work of a library such as ours.

Even as the world continues to adapt to life with the pandemic, we see signs of recovery here at the UL. The number of guests in our spaces and users of our services nears pre-COVID levels.

We are excited seeing the activity in the libraries once again, and we are happy to share our impact report with you.

Respectfully,

Denise Stephens

UL Releases Five-Year Strategic Plan

The University Libraries (UL) released its five-year strategic plan for 2022-2027, providing the blueprint for its growth in alignment with the University's Lead On plan. The strategic plan is our outline of our strategic commitments to the stakeholders and communities we serve.

A living, working document, the plan was crafted with input from internal and external stakeholders alike. Five internal UL teams were formed to execute the strategic plan research and design process, which included a survey sent to the entire campus community.

The plan will be instrumental as part of OU's goal to become a top-tier research institution, refining the Libraries' missions and principles and outlining five strategic priorities for the coming years. It is published on the UL website for full review.

MISSION

We are a catalyst and a destination elevating our community's ability to imagine, explore, discover, and create knowledge that changes lives.

PRINCIPLES

University Libraries serves, connects, and empowers the University communities in their discovery, creation, and sharing of knowledge. Our guiding principles are:

We build, deliver, and sustain services, expertise, and scholarly information that reflects the broad research and learning needs of our diverse and evolving communities.

We facilitate the work of research and learning communities as an accessible, welcoming, and productive virtual and physical place.

We lead initiatives and collaborations expanding our impact on the research and learning objectives of the communities we serve.

We innovate and adapt in concert with stakeholder engagement and changes in the information environment.

THE FIVE STRATEGIC PRIORITIES

Priority 1:
Leverage and advance the University Libraries to position the university as a top-tier research institution

Priority 2:
Contribute to student success and information fluency by leveraging library expertise and partnerships

Priority 3:
Build and develop a robust offering of information resources and tools enabling affordability and accessibility

Priority 4:
Embody OU's diverse community of stakeholders by establishing the UL as an inclusive place for the exchange of ideas, learning, and discovery

Priority 5:
Strategically enhance, preserve, and promote our distinctive research collections and archives in the service of scholarly and creative activity

New Hires Build Upon Expertise

The University Libraries (UL) added over ten new employees in 2021-2022, including two members to the Libraries leadership team, Associate Dean for Digital Strategies and Innovation Jessica Davila and Director of Marketing and Communications MaryAnn Martin, Ph.D.

Davila joined the UL from the Claremont Colleges in California and Dr. Martin from the Oklahoma public sector.

Open access initiatives are a strategic priority for the University Libraries, and the UL filled key roles in the Open Initiatives and Scholarly Communication (OISC) unit that oversees this area. Melissa Seelye joined OISC as Director of Open Initiatives and Scholarly Communications and Morgan Briles started as Open Educational Resources Librarian.

Emerging Technology Librarian Jessica Lumry, and Description and Access Librarian Joshua Henry added to the ranks of the Libraries' information professionals.

UL ADDED IMPORTANT PAPERS FOR HISTORY OF SCIENCE, CONTEMPORARY NATIVE AMERICAN AUTHORS COLLECTIONS

The University Libraries added stunning new items to its collections, including a first edition, second issue of early European astronomer Tycho Brahe's De Mundi Aetherei, papers from History of Geology scholars Martin J. S. Rudwick, Hugh S. Torrens, and Kenneth L. Taylor, and renowned Native American writer LeAnne Howe. In the fall, 1959 OU alum Ron Johnson gifted the University $2 million and a letter between Nobel Prize winner and Dr. Zhivago author Boris Pasternak and himself.

A small portion of the books donated to the OU History of Science collection by scholar John Christianson. Received by History of Science Curator Dr. Kerry Magruder in March 2022, Christianson's donation and the acquisition of De Mundi Aetherei reinforce OU's reputation as a research destination for global scholars on the history of astronomy.

OU also acquired the papers from preeminent history of geology scholars Martin J.S. Rudwick, Hugh S. Torrens, and Kenneth Taylor. Notably, the new papers support the work of Mary Anning, a pivotal figure in the history of geology who helped shore up the fossil record by her discoveries in the early 1800s in Wales. The papers also include original historical items, such as disbound portraits and hand-colored plates, as well as Rudwick's annotated copy of Charles Lyell's Principles of Geology (1830-1833).

Lauded Native American writer and Eidson Distinguished Professor of English at the University of Georgia, LeAnne Howe reads from her works with guests and other invited collaborators and speakers at an event at OU in her honor Spring 2022. The event celebrated the availability of her papers in the University Libraries Western History Collections.

Ronald Keith Jones, OU Class of 1959, went from a brokenhearted college student and athlete, typing letters to legendary Dr. Zhivago author Boris Pasternak in the bathroom of his fraternity house, to a successful Dallas banker. In 2021, he gave back to his beloved alma mater with a monetary gift and unique treasure: the letter Pasternak wrote back to the lovelorn undergraduate.

DAVIS PILOTS NEW NSF-SUPPORTED NAUTILUS PROGRAM

UL Expertise Eases Access to High-Powered Computing Technology for OU Campus, National Partners

By Dr. Mark Laufersweiler, Head of DAVIS, and Tyler Pearson, Head of Informatics

University Libraries' Data Analytics, Visualizations, and Informatics Syndicate (DAVIS) unit partnered with researchers and departments across campus and the country to pilot a new program, called "Nautilus," that facilitates access to high-powered computing technology through a common computing environment.

The National Science Foundation (NSF) funded the underlying infrastructure and support for the Nautilus effort, which was built and maintained by the National Research Platform. This cloud-hosted platform, composed of over 50 partner institutions, allows for real-time access to computational resources supporting research and learning.

To date, over 200 individuals across multiple organizations have accessed this UL pilot, which positively impacts OU research, UL Software Carpentry workshops, and multiple courses at OU.

One impact of containers on research practices is the ability to support FAIR practices, access research data and software, and aid in the reproducibility of research workflows. For instruction, the use of the Nautilus portal and containers allows for all students in a course to have access to the same computing resources and tools provided they have access to a reliable network connection.

The UL has made these configurations available to other institutions, sharing our knowledge and expertise to help lower other libraries' barriers of entry for their use of the Nautilus project.

NEW JOURNALS AND DATABASES

JSTOR (Ebooks)

Ebooks from select publishers are now available on the JSTOR platform and via the University Libraries' catalog. Available ebooks are from university presses and publishers supporting DEI-related scholarship. These ebooks are integrated with journals and images available on the JSTOR platform.

The Journal of Forensic Social Work

A newly relaunched journal, now published open access in collaboration with University Libraries' Open Initiatives and Scholarly Communication unit.

UL Successfully Petitions Library of Congress to Rename 1919 Arkansas Race Massacre

On the heels of OU Libraries' successful 2021 proposal to change the subject heading "Tulsa Race Riot" to "Tulsa Race Massacre," the Library of Congress (LOC) has corrected yet another instance of "metadata injustice." This time, the change concerned one of the deadliest instances of racial violence in the U.S.: a 1919 event in which hundreds of Black sharecroppers and community bystanders were massacred by a white mob in the small, mostly Black, Arkansas town of Elaine.

Previously, the LOC subject heading for the mass murder was "Elaine Race Riot," the language of which effectively placed blame on both parties and erased the brutal acts of violence committed against Black community members. Metadata systems should reflect current culture; they should be unbiased, in users' natural language, and not perpetuate harmful stereotypes. This includes the search terms and subject headings by which users search library catalogs, which is regulated by the Library of Congress. But as of April 2022, LOC corrected the metadata used after a petition by the OU Libraries' Learning and Working Group on Metadata Justice. Library users across the country will now be able to find materials by searching for "Elaine Race Massacre," the term most used today.

The OU Libraries working group's efforts that started with the Tulsa Race Massacre were importantly aided by the previous and ongoing efforts of the Tulsa Race Massacre Centennial Commission and the Greenwood Cultural Center.

"In making this small but significant shift, the Library of Congress is helping to bring forward a more historically accurate perspective of what actually occurred," said Dr. Karlos Hill, associate professor and chair of the Clara Luper Department of African and African American Studies in the OU College of Arts and Sciences, in reference to the OU Libraries' 2021 "Tulsa Race Massacre" proposal.

Bailey Hoffner, working group member and University Libraries metadata and collections management archivist, said, "It's important to all of us in the working group that we make clear [that] none of our work would have been possible without the efforts of survivors, descendants, and members of Tulsa's Black community."

"The work of the working group was a small measure of gratitude for the heaviest lift of all – carrying the memory of a thriving Greenwood alongside the memory of the massacre into our public consciousness," said Hoffner.

This image from the Library of Congress shows Colonel Isaac C. Jenks, commander of two rifle companies of the 57th Infantry of the 3rd Division from Camp Pike in Little Rock, with unidentified soldiers who were dispatched to Elaine, Arkansas, during the race massacre.

OU, University Libraries Celebrate Legacy, Impact of Cherokee Writer Lynn Riggs

Oklahoma's most famous—and perhaps, most obscure—poet, playwright, and author received long overdue recognition at OU in 2021-2022.

Rollie Lynne Riggs, the Oklahoma-born citizen of the Cherokee Nation whose play Green Grows the Lilacs inspired the Broadway musical Oklahoma!, received a posthumous doctorate degree at the Spring 2022 commencement ceremonies.

Riggs' nieces Edrye Riggs Doman and Amy Sperry accepted the posthumous honorary doctorate on his behalf in May 2022. Other family members and dignitaries traveled to Norman for the ceremony to honor the prolific writer.

In a collaboration between the Western History Collections of the University of Oklahoma Libraries, the Mark Allen Everett Poetry Series, as well as the Native Nations Center and Native American Studies, Lynn Riggs Week in November 2021 also highlighted Riggs' life and writing.

To celebrate the centennial of Riggs' attendance at the University of Oklahoma in November 2021, project collaborators brought together scholars, poets, and performers from across the country, including Anna Smist (Sac & Fox Nation of Oklahoma, Deer Clan), John Dennis Anderson, Sy Hoahwah (Yapaituka Comanche/Southern Arapaho), and Craig Womack (Creek/Cherokee).

The week-long series of presentations, discussions, readings, and performances represented a cross-section of the scholarly expertise on and impact of his work, speaking to the prestige these collections bring to the University of Oklahoma Libraries and WHC.

"Lynn Riggs Week was amazing," said Dr. Crag Hill, professor of English education in the department of Instructional Leadership and Curriculum. "It was like we had a miniature 'dream course' on Lynn Riggs. The presenters and performers provided insights about Lynn's life and work that were illuminating, uplifting, and smart."

UL Exhibits Collaborates with Campus Partners to Display Former Professor's Costume Designs

University Library Exhibits launched a campus collaboration in 2021 featuring a selection of costumes from the University of Oklahoma's Department of Drama. Currently on display for the 2022-2023 academic year, the costumes were designed by late Mike Buchwald, a professor of costume design for 40 years with the University of Oklahoma Helmerich School of Drama.

Curated by OU's current costume designer, Lloyd Cracknell, the costumes lining the large hallways on the main floor of the Bizzell Memorial Library are just a small sample of Buchwald's designs for the 2010 performance of "The Three Musketeers", which was his final show before retiring. It is an even smaller taste of the full corpus of Mike's work which included designs for over 500 plays, musicals, operas, and ballets for OU theatre productions during his time as the resident costume designer for the School of Drama and University Theatre.

"Mike's dedication to excellence, magnificent design, and superb artistry permeated every aspect of production and education in the School of Drama," said Cracknell. "During his tenure at OU, Professor Buchwald was recognized with the Regents' Award for Superior Teaching, the Associates' Lecturer of Excellence Award, and as the Rothbaum Presidential Professor of Excellence in the Arts."

"Mike passed away on August 4, 2021. He will be greatly missed by all that were lucky enough to call him mentor, colleague, and friend. His service and legacy to the University lives on through the lives and careers of his students."

University Libraries Signs Open Access "Read and Publish" Agreements with Oxford, Cambridge University Presses

University Libraries negotiated "read and publish" agreements with both Oxford and Cambridge University Presses that will increase journal article publishing and reading access to both presses for OU authors across all OU campuses and OU community members.

OU Libraries is only the second university library in the U.S. to sign a read and publish agreement with Oxford University Press.

With a read and publish agreement, corresponding authors pay nothing to be published open access, peer review processes remain in place, and the work will not be placed behind a publication paywall. They are part of a larger trend in academic publishing.

In addition to raising the research profile of the University of Oklahoma, open access scholarly articles undergo rigorous peer review before publication, said University Libraries Associate Dean for Scholarly Communications and Collection Management Karen Rupp-Serrano. But now, anyone with internet access in the world can read what OU authors publish in these journals.

Coffee lovers, hungry students and faculty rejoiced at the Bookmark's reopening on LL1 in Bizzell Memorial in January 2022, marking a central hub of activity's return.

2021-2022 UNDERGRADUATE RESEARCH AWARDS

Three undergraduate students were awarded cash prizes and recognized for their innovative use of the OU Libraries' collections. These students demonstrated excellence in their research methods, not only through their final submitted projects, but in a personal essay reflecting on their experience and outlining their process.

ALTERNATIVE TEXTBOOK GRANTS RETURN IN 2022

OU Libraries awarded eight instructors sizable grants to abandon costly required course books in favor of free, open access materials. Recipients of the Alternative Textbook Grant (ATG) were awarded up to $2,500 each, with many colleges providing supplemental funds.

The flexibility of open resources materials means that instructors can tailor the textbooks to their specific curriculum, that the information can evolve over time, and that the students always have access to it.

The grant is an OU Libraries' strategic priority in action — providing robust, yet affordable and accessible information resources. The ATG ensures that all students, regardless of their economic circumstances, will have their necessary learning materials from the first day of class.
